A LETTER FROM THE HELM

A LETTER FROM THE HELM

We're not there quite yet, but Safe Harbor will be 10 years old this fall. That's young, but there's something timeless about all of this.

What is timeless?

For one thing, the oceans are timeless. I read somewhere recently that water is older than the sun. To be sure, the title of this annual publication, now in its sixth edition, will outlast any vessel that roams upon it.

For another thing, people are timeless. In the pages ahead, you'll read about Suzy Chadderdon and Kim Sharp who just celebrated their 41st and 31st anniversary at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove, respectively. That stunning jewel is virtually inseparable from their auspicious and enduring essence. So too with Montauk's Chuck Morton, who celebrated 50 years of continual and unmatched leadership at "The End" in May.

Now just one more thing that is timeless: the spirit of wild exploration. We hope this issue of Safe Harbor Water Magazine inspires you to cast off the lines, slip out of the harbor, and chase down some of the greatest memories of your lives.

Baxter Underwood, CEO

JOY OF SUMMER CRUISING

JOY OF SUMMER CRUISING

Safe Harbor kicks off and closes out summer in the Northeast in two distinct and desirable destinations.

📍 MONTAUK, NEW YORK

With rugged beaches and cliffs to the south and languid bay waters and coves to the north, Montauk is as majestic a port of call as any on Earth. Whether you're there for sport, leisure, or some measure of the two, this town at the eastern tip of Long Island combines raw, natural beauty with maritime heritage. And it offers a unique perspective, thanks to the elevation out at the point that's best viewed from the water.

The product of glacial deposits to the north and continuous erosion from the Atlantic Ocean, Montauk offers a dramatic backdrop for cruising, and it is as scenic as any other prime boating location on the East Coast. Along with the rest of Long Island's East End—or “The End,” as Montauk is colloquially known—Montauk has changed over the years, particularly in town, which no longer feels like the hardcore fishing village it once was. Today, celebrities and influencers make the jaunt from Manhattan to hole up in the area's many estates and inns, and to dine and shop. But even so, the town maintains a salty charisma that's lured boaters to its shores for decades.

If you're a serious fisherman, there's hardly a better outpost from which to depart along the Eastern Seaboard—and perhaps the world—than Montauk. Throughout the seasons, there are angling opportunities for everything from striped bass, sea bass, and fluke near shore to the mahi mahi, tuna, and marlin that swim in the offshore canyons and near temperature breaks along the edge of the Gulf Stream.

Private beach at Montauk Yacht Club

Montauk's Star Island, situated on Lake Montauk, has been ground zero for the boating set for more than a century. It's home to Safe Harbor Montauk Yacht Club, a great jumping-off point for offshore and coastal adventures. Around the corner from the club is the iconic Montauk Point Lighthouse, which sits sentinel atop windswept bluffs, a beacon for mariners since 1796. The secluded coves that dot the coastline to the west offer tranquility, privacy, and respite from the relatively bustling energy of the town center. These hidden gems, accessible only by boat, are just a few of the surprises that cruisers discover here.

Safe Harbor acquired the property in 2022, restoring its original name, Montauk Yacht Club, and reopening in summer 2023 after giving the almost century-old fixture—and former hangout of the Vanderbilts, Whitneys, and Astors—a thorough makeover. The new Montauk Yacht Club's restaurants, pools, and 107 guest rooms and villas received an upgrade, as did the guest experiences and the marina, which has over 230 boat slips—including some that accommodate boats up to 300 feet.

Each June, Safe Harbor Dream Weekend kicks off summer with an unforgettable waterfront escape at Montauk Yacht Club. Guests enjoy gourmet dining by award-winning Chef Jarad McCarroll, exclusive resort amenities, private beach lounging, and scenic excursions, culminating in a seaside soirée on the Great Lawn. The weekend wraps up with time to explore Montauk and reconnect with friends.

Members mingle during Safe Harbor Dream Weekend

A summer spent cruising the Northeast is hardly complete without a stop in Newport, Rhode Island, one of New England's oldest towns and the sailing capital of the world.

Strolling the cobblestone streets of Newport, you get the feel of a coastal city that's been around for a century—or three. This East Coast playground goes as far back as the founding of the colonies. During the Gilded Age, wealthy families from New York and Philadelphia who wanted to beat the summer heat beat a path here and built “cottages.” Some of these mansions feature elements that were designed and assembled in Europe, then broken down and shipped, only to be reconfigured in Newport. These estates—particularly on Bellevue Avenue along the windward, rocky shoreline—continue to draw the interest of visitors today. The 1895-built Breakers is a favorite.

But what initially brought folks to Newport in the summer were the prodigious breezes that howl up Narragansett Bay, which funnels southwesterly trade winds. Whether you're there on the matter of yachting or for more idle, land-based pursuits, the area's almost incessant breeze produces what is arguably some of the most delightful air on Earth.

Newport is the sailing capital of the world with good reason: Regattas abound all summer long. But so do other festivities—folk and jazz festivals for example, which also take place in the summer months. And there's hardly a better way to attend them than by boat.

Furthermore, Newport's culinary landscape reflects its maritime roots. There's plenty of waterfront dining in this town, with menus featuring local favorites, from chowders, soups, and stews to shellfish that's baked, steamed, and fried. Wash it down with a Del's Lemonade and you're in a very distinct heaven unto its own.

Safe Harbor has 11 locations in Rhode Island: Safe Harbor Newport Shipyard, Safe Harbor Jamestown Boatyard, Safe Harbor Cove Haven in Barrington, Safe Harbor Silver Spring in Wakefield, Safe Harbor Greenwich Bay and Safe Harbor Cowesett in Warwick, and Safe Harbor Wickford Cove and Safe Harbor Allen Harbor in North Kingstown.

📍 NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND

A highlight of summer in Newport is Safe Harbor Race Weekend, an August sailing regatta that includes a variety of beloved shoreside events.

Clambake at Safe Harbor New England Boatworks

Three more locations are in Portsmouth: Safe Harbor New England Boatworks, Safe Harbor Sakonnet, and Safe Harbor Island Park. The variety of properties is advantageous for Members, since the Newport region attracts big crowds come summer and finding slips isn't always such a breeze.

A highlight of a summer in Newport is Safe Harbor Race Weekend, a sailing regatta that features monohull and multihull vessels from 30 feet and up, and a variety of classes, including a superyacht class. The event, which takes place the second weekend in August, is hosted by Safe Harbor locations in Newport, Portsmouth, and Jamestown. In addition to the sailing, the weekend includes a legendary New England clambake, live music, and other beloved shoreside events. ▀

MONTAUK YACHT CLUB

Where Barefoot Luxury Meets Waterfront Adventure

Since 1928, Montauk Yacht Club has been a haven for those drawn to the water. Set on 16 acres of historic Star Island, it offers 107 guest rooms and over 230 boat slips—making it the largest luxury resort and marina in the Hamptons. Here, days unfold between dockside serenity, elevated dining at Ocean Club Montauk, and moments of leisure across indoor and outdoor pools, padel and tennis courts, and the floating cabana spa.

Hands down the absolute best marina and staff I have ever dealt with! Every other marina has been difficult and made us feel like a number on their board, or a "transaction." Safe Harbor Puerto Del Rey has never given me a feeling of anything less than being a part of the family. I don't know if you guys know how accommodating and incredible you really are. Literally, every person I have been in contact with here has been nothing less than stellar. You are all simply amazing. Aside from our saildrive failure and a minor reef strike, our unforeseen and unscheduled stop here in Puerto Rico, thanks to the Safe Harbor Puerto Del Rey staff, has been an incredible experience! I give you my genuine, heartfelt thanks!

Robynn confirmed our reservation quickly and sent us an email confirmation with our slip assignment, a map of where our slip was located, and helpful information about the marina. We have been boating for over 35 years, and this is the first time we have ever been given all this valuable information in advance. The bathrooms and grounds were immaculate, the pool was relaxing, and we would definitely love to visit again! SAFE HARBOR OLD PORT COVE

We have stayed at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove many times over the years. It has always been a great place. We wondered how it might change under the Safe Harbor banner; well, it did change, and it is even better. The facility is first-rate: great docks and easy fueling. Excellent laundry, captain's lounge, bath facilities, exercise room, etc. But the best feature is the absolutely superb staff: Suzy and Kim in the front office are the epitome of customer service. Joe, the very experienced dockmaster, is equally excellent, as is his entire staff. Transient slips are always difficult to find on the East Coast of Florida, but they will always do their best to accommodate you. Safe Harbor Old Port Cove is simply the best.

Safe Harbor's new Chief Development Officer, Colby Cooper, says a behind-the-scenes focus on people, process, and tools creates excellence across the network.

Colby Cooper is a big believer in the message that celebrated football coach Nick Saban used to share with players in the locker room at the University of Alabama. "He always preached the notion of process," Cooper says. "Don't focus on winning the game or the national championships. Focus on the process, and the results will come. I expand that to the people, the process, and the tools. When you focus on those things, you build longevity, consistency, and a model that thrives and produces excellence."

Those are the goals Cooper brings to his new role as Chief Development Officer at Safe Harbor. He thinks of his job as coaching the behind-the-scenes team that is responsible for building, maintaining, and enhancing Safe Harbor's properties throughout the network.

Every project includes an element of design, approvals, construction, and certification, which is why his job involves tapping into a myriad of skills.

Cooper and his team work very closely with Marina Operations to create clean-slate visions after destructive hurricanes, design new upland amenities for Members, crews, and guests, develop smartly organized dry stack facilities, and more.

To all these tasks, Cooper brings significant experience to draw upon for just about everything that Safe Harbor's locations might need. His prior roles have included serving as Director of Communications for the National Security Council at the White House; as Senior Adviser to U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice; as Director of Corporate Communications for PepsiCo; as Chief of Staff for the city of Mobile, Alabama; and as Principal of Soleus, a consulting firm specializing in real estate and marina development.

Cooper says that given his background in government and national security, he never expected to end up working in the marina industry. However, he does have boating in his blood. He grew up in Oxford, New York, spending summers with his family on Lake Champlain, just south of a marina that Safe Harbor owns and operates today.

With a background spanning the White House, corporate America, and city leadership, Cooper brings a unique set of skills to the team.

Colby (left) grew up sailing with family on Lake Champlain—just south of Safe Harbor Willsboro Bay

His path to Safe Harbor began in April 2017, when he found himself standing at a greenfield site in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. The location was supposed to be used for a marina development, but after 10 or 15 years, the project had remained stalled. “I was instructed to figure it out for a real-estate developer,” he recalls.

At that time, he’d never heard of Safe Harbor, but he put together a team of 35 consultants who figured out how to make a viable plan and get it approved—a plan so strong that Safe Harbor purchased it in 2019. Cooper and his team then oversaw development of the property and delivered what is today the north marina at Safe Harbor Lauderdale Marine Center.

He went on to work with Safe Harbor’s team on additional redevelopment projects. Then, in autumn 2024, Safe Harbor had a personnel change, leading him to the opportunity to serve as Chief Development Officer.

One of the things that drew him to the role is Safe Harbor's culture of constant improvement. Cooper says that he, too, believes in lifelong learning and fits right in with the Safe Harbor team, where constantly working to improve is built into the fabric of everyday operations.

"Our brand is deeper than a logo. It is an essence. It is a feeling. It is what people say about you when you leave the room. Our role is to build the product that is part of this dynamic brand that is always evolving, learning, and investing," Cooper says.

Another thing that attracted Cooper to Safe Harbor is the humility that he sees in its leadership. After spending countless hours with many of the most powerful people in business and politics all around the world, he says the humility that he sees at Safe Harbor is rare—especially the way the Safe Harbor team respects each property's local culture while applying best practices for improvements.

Safe Harbor Lauderdale Marine Center north marina

"The humility aspect of Safe Harbor is something not often seen or appreciated in industry leaders," Cooper says. "I'm attracted to being part of a humble team that is striving to positively impact a global industry."

These core values are the foundation of how Safe Harbor does business, and why he believes the business will succeed in its vision, Cooper adds. His favorite proverb is: "As iron sharpens iron, so one person sharpens another." The idea is that through interaction and support, individuals can help one another grow and become better with a compounding effect.

"Great things are not accomplished by single people or in isolation. It takes a full team working together toward shared goals," he says. "That's what I value most." ■

WILD CHARLESTON

W C H A R L

The Southeastern Wildlife Exposition is just one more great reason to visit the Holy City.

LD ESTON

Back in 1983, a group of conservation-oriented Charlestonians launched a small outdoors expo. The idea behind the Southeastern Wildlife Exposition was to highlight the Southeast's wild places and the organizations that support them. The first event drew 5,000 attendees and 100 local exhibitors, many of whom were artists that promoted the conservation of wild lands and waters below the Mason-Dixon Line. Today, SEWE, as it has come to be known, draws around 40,000 attendees and over 500 artists, exhibitors, and wildlife experts. And they've created a festival unlike any other in the U.S. SEWE is among the most celebrated annual events in the Holy City for locals and visitors alike.

My wife and I have lived in Charleston since 2005 and have attended SEWE every year since. In 2025, we were invited by Safe Harbor to enjoy the festival in a different way, as guests of Charleston's two neighboring Safe Harbor locations. Safe Harbor Bristol and Safe Harbor Charleston City are located on the historic downtown peninsula's southern edge and within walking distance of SEWE's waterfront events. The marinas also offer shuttle rides to the exhibits downtown.

We're not strangers to Safe Harbor Charleston City, home to the iconic MegaDock and some of the world's most prestigious yachts. We have liveaboard friends there, and we've pushed off from the docks on sail and powerboats. But one thing we hadn't yet experienced is an overnight stay in one of their 60-foot-long floating Water Suites—exclusive catamaran-based vessels designed and built at Safe Harbor New England Boatworks. With a king bed, kitchen, and yacht-style deck perfect for sunset views, it was a uniquely serene stay. The Water Suites are a terrific option for Safe Harbor Members visiting this historic city—and the Safe Harbor team made our trip seamless, even securing SEWE tickets and shuttle rides around town.

If you're going to attend SEWE, arrive on Thursday, since events start early on Friday. We started the day with a bowl of shrimp and grits and a crab cake Benedict at the Marina Variety Store Restaurant at Safe Harbor Charleston City, a venerable eatery frequented by Charleston's saltiest souls. Then, we walked up to Brittlebank Park to enjoy SEWE's signature canine events. DockDogs was a hilarious and spectacular aquatic long-jump contest during which the pooches enjoyed themselves even more than the spectators. The park also hosted sheepdog herding and flying disk retrieving with athletic Boykin Spaniels. I was happy to see Orvis' annual fly-fishing demo. The perfect fly-rod cast can become a lifelong obsession; this is a good place to learn the basics.

On Saturday morning, we shifted our focus to downtown's Marion Square. We were among a large crowd of gawkers at the birds of prey flight demonstration. Hosted by the Avian Conservation Center in nearby Awendaw, the trained hawks and falcons were simply astonishing. Several other area wildlife organizations organized workshops at this historic park. We opted to check out the Dolphin Doctor workshop hosted by the National Marine Mammal Foundation. They do tremendous work helping cetaceans along the U.S. coastline. We then headed over to the Marion Square chef demo tent for a presentation by South Carolina's up-and-coming culinary ambassadors. Afterward, we lunched on a Lowcountry boil of shrimp, crabs, sausage, corn, and potatoes.

At every SEWE, you're likely to find a terrific wildlife show at the Gaillard Center. This year was no different. We were entertained by biologist Forrest Galante, who brought a sloth, a spider monkey, and a bat-eared fox that had the kids in the audience shrieking with delight. The Gaillard also hosts many purveyors of fine Southern-made goods. Like most people who attend SEWE, we wandered here for a couple of hours, admiring handmade cast nets from StoneFly and John Hollifield's exquisite bamboo fly rods, among other things. If you don't need angling gear, shop the leather goods at Clayton & Crume or HookNHide, and the handcrafted knives from Chad Weatherford. If you have space aboard your boat to bring a big piece home, Capers Cauthen's Landrum Tables are crafted from reclaimed timber and structures from across the Lowcountry.

To top off a great day, we headed back to Safe Harbor Charleston City for a proper Lowcountry oyster roast, with knives we bought from Lowcountry Shuckers. Heaps of fresh, steaming oysters were dumped out on a big table. We ate them the proper Charleston way: shuck each one and then lay it atop a saltine with a dash of Tabasco sauce.

On Sunday, we kicked off our last day of SEWE at Poogan's Porch on Queen Street with a mimosa and tomato pie omelet. We then strolled down to The Charleston Place hotel for the big fine art exhibit. The works were varied, and in some cases astonishing, which is why newcomers to the festival are encouraged to set aside a few hours to see this exhibit. Our favorite works included Larry Ringgold's eye-popping driftwood wildlife sculptures, Scott Penegar's bronze-sculpted aquatic life and Paul

Art exhibition at The Charleston Place hotel

Rhymer's birds of prey in bronze, wood, and steel. There was also an extensive selection of fine painting and photography—most of it focused on wildlife and Southern landscapes, from artists such as Ron Thomson and Michael Watts. Evocative paintings of historic Charleston architecture by Larry Moore and Lowcountry landscapes by Mark Kelvin Horton drew admiring stares.

After a few hours on our feet, we chose to close out the day across Meeting Street at Hank's Seafood Restaurant, an iconic Charleston establishment that's consistently been voted the best seafood restaurant in a city filled with excellent seafood. We started with blackened local scallops, then Hank's signature plate filled with collard greens, mashed potatoes, and buttermilk fried chicken.

I'd say we did SEWE just right—with a special thanks to Safe Harbor for the exceptional hospitality and a truly memorable experience. ▀

5th Annual Safe Harbor
Race Weekend

August 8-10, 2025
Newport, Rhode Island

THE ART OF EXCELLENCE

EXCELLENCE

Throughout the Safe Harbor network, a legacy of craftsmanship and top-notch service gives boaters a level of confidence they can't find anywhere else.

The 42' Pursuit's owner was starting to get antsy. He and six of his buddies had organized a golf weekend on Nantucket, but one of the boat's quad 425-hp Yamahas was flashing an overheat alarm. The boat was at Safe Harbor Fiddler's Cove in North Falmouth, Massachusetts, and thoughts were starting to creep in about having to cancel all those tee times.

That's when Sonny Wilkinson got back from lunch. He's a technician at Safe Harbor Fiddler's Cove who had seen that same overheat alarm a few times on other boats with the same motors.

"It's a false alarm," Wilkinson said. "A water pressure sensor stops working, and the engine thinks it's overheating."

Yamaha knows about it. If it's under warranty, they cover it without asking a lot of questions."

The ecstatic golfers offered Wilkinson a beer, which he declined because he was still on the clock, and they were off on the boat to hit the links—which is, of course, the whole point. People buy boats to have fun. Boats are supposed to be one of the antidotes to life's aggravations. That's why having strong service teams to keep those boats up and running is of such immense importance throughout the Safe Harbor network of locations.

"What we have is unique and incomparable due to the size of our network," says Ray LeBlanc, Director of Service Operations at Safe Harbor. "Our teams can step on a boat, anticipate an issue that could arise, and get ahead of it. It's our job to make sure our Members can use their vessels when they want to. A lost weekend can ruin a summer. The stakes are very high, and we take it seriously.”

It’s not uncommon, LeBlanc says, to have technicians at Safe Harbor who have been working at their craft for 20, 30, or 40 years. That depth of knowledge helps to create not just good everyday service, but also an art of excellence with all kinds of specialized skills at Safe Harbor’s various locations.

Ron Jiovani, for instance, has been in the marine business for 40 years. He’s the Service Manager at Safe Harbor Jefferson Beach in St. Clair Shores, Michigan, where he often finds himself saving a great boating weekend that mechanical problems were threatening to derail. “This happens a couple times a year,” Jiovani says. “A Member will have seven or eight people on their boat, and they’ll call up and say: ‘This engine won’t start. I’ve tried everything.’ I’ll go out to the boat and get it going, and they all erupt in a big cheer. It’s often something like somebody leaned on a gearshift and put it out of gear so it won’t start.”

Jiovani says the quality of service boaters receive actually brings more boaters into the Safe Harbor family. They’ll be introduced to Safe Harbor by requesting maintenance, and then the experience is so good, they not only decide to become a Safe Harbor Member, but they also encourage other boaters to do the same.

A photograph of a person wearing a green helmet and a dark vest over a light-colored long-sleeved shirt. They are standing on the deck of a boat, handling a large coil of white rope. The background shows a bright sunset or sunrise over the water, with the sun low on the horizon creating a strong lens flare. The boat's railing and other equipment are visible in the foreground.

Our teams can step on a boat, anticipate an issue that could arise, and get ahead of it. It’s our job to make sure our Members can use their vessels when they want to.”

RAY LEBLANC | DIRECTOR OF SERVICE OPERATIONS

This phenomenon of high-quality service leading to Safe Harbor Membership happens throughout the network, LeBlanc says. “Our service facilities are not just for our Members. Any boater can contact our facilities for vessel service. If we have the capacity to meet their needs, it’s quite common that a boater who is not a Safe Harbor Member will have such a positive experience, they decide to store their boat with us.”

For boaters who enjoy coastal or other long-distance cruising, the consistency of high-quality service throughout the network is key, LeBlanc says. It’s hard to be out on a boat hundreds of miles from your home port and have something go wrong. The nearly 140 Safe Harbor locations give cruising families peace of mind that reliable service is always nearby, whether your vessel is a 13’ Boston Whaler or a 300’+ megayacht.

“Your home port can be in Maine, and while traveling down the East Coast, you have endless options to receive exemplary services,” LeBlanc says. “You can haul your boat out in so many places, and the quality of work you will receive is top-notch.”

A Member will have seven or eight people on their boat and they'll call up and say: 'This engine won't start. I've tried everything.' I'll go out to the boat and get it going, and they all erupt in a big cheer.”

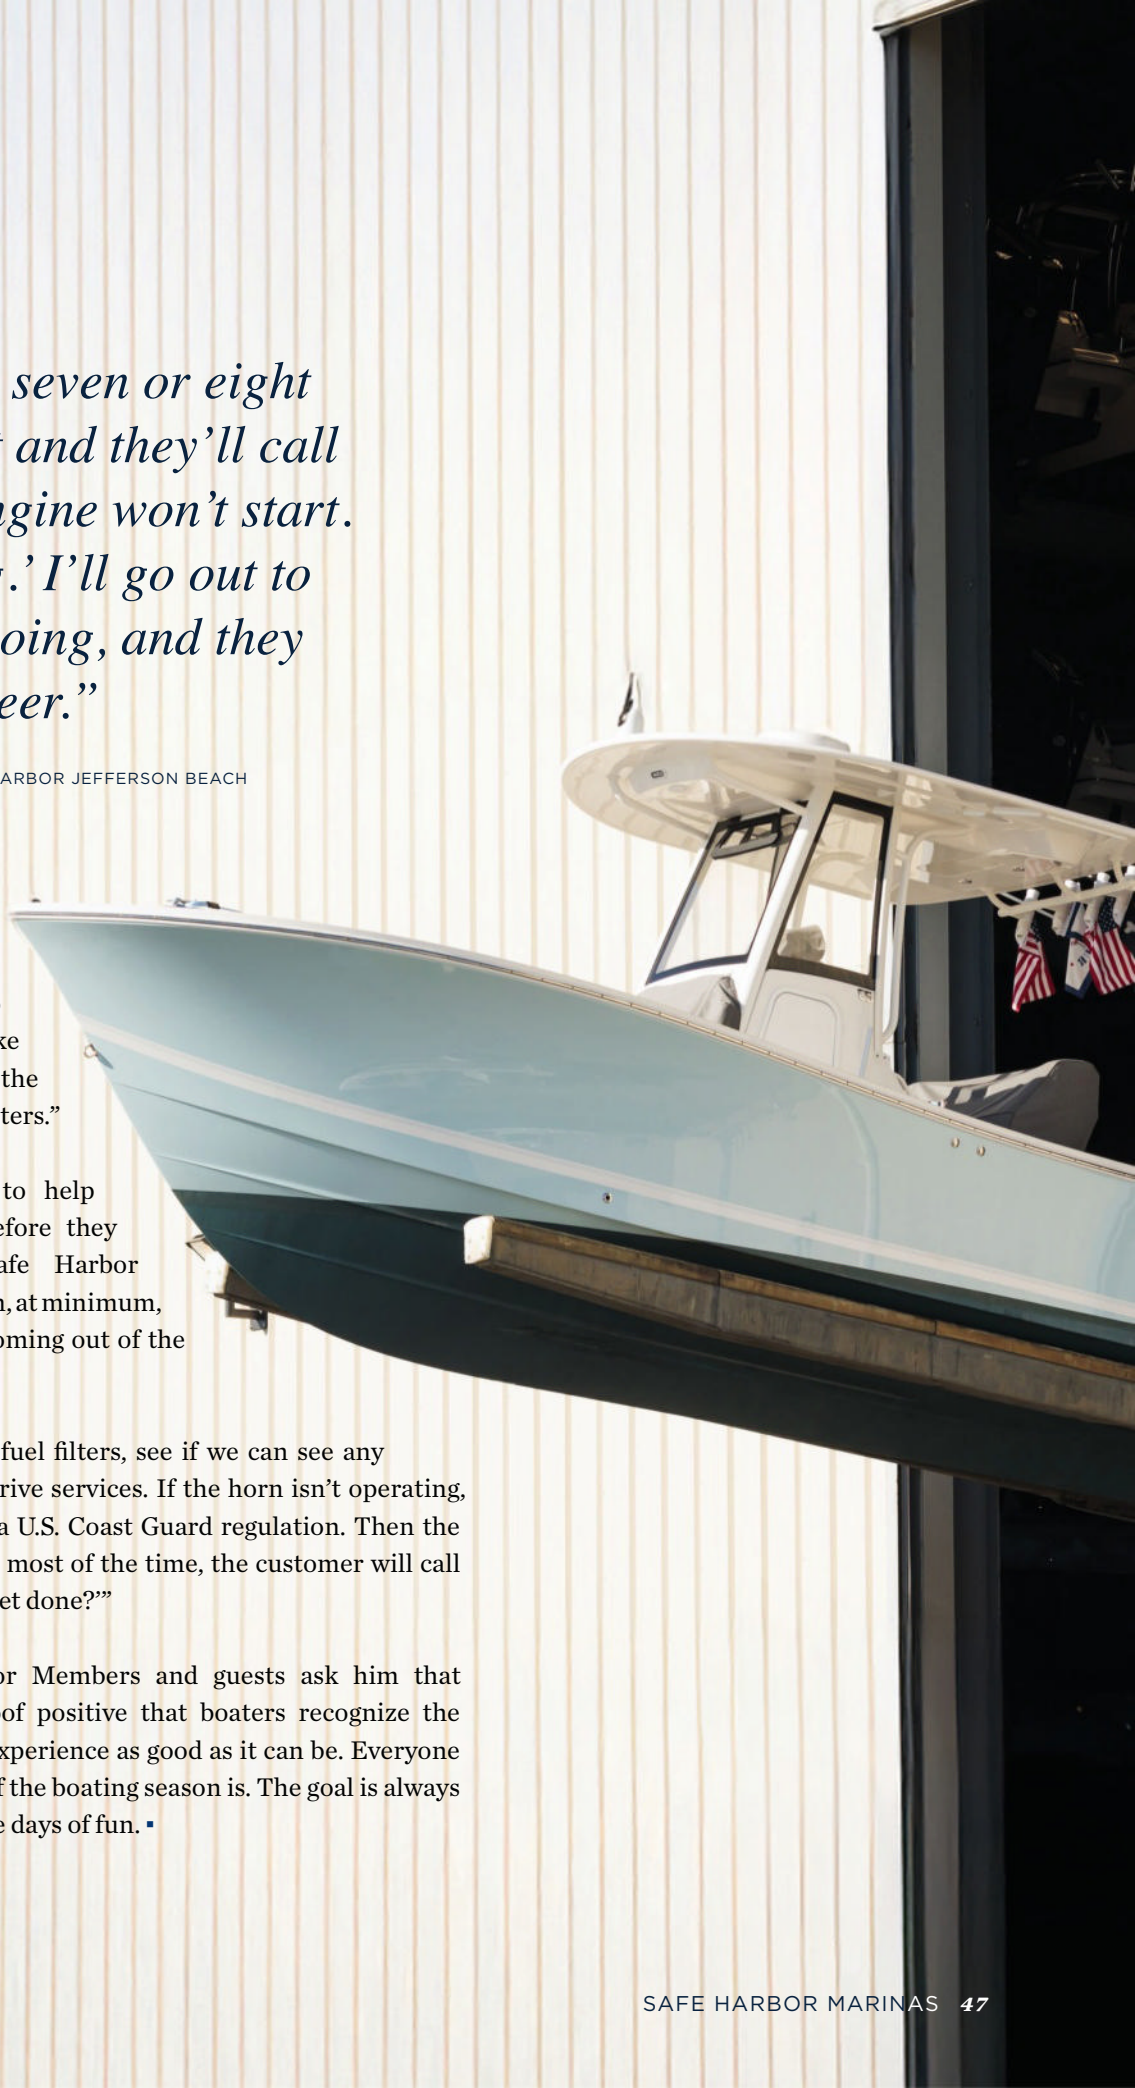

RON GIOVANI | SERVICE MANAGER AT SAFE HARBOR JEFFERSON BEACH

Wilkinson says that consistently providing that level of service has brought many regular customers to Safe Harbor Fiddler's Cove. “They like that I'm not a ‘90-percenter.’ I also do the last 10 percent of work that really matters.”

Jiovani says technicians also try to help boaters spot potential problems before they become weekend-wreckers. At Safe Harbor Jefferson Beach, his team runs through, at minimum, a 30-point checklist for every boat coming out of the water in the fall.

“We'll check the flame arrestors, the fuel filters, see if we can see any old wires,” Jiovani says. “We do outdrive services. If the horn isn't operating, we'll mark that down because that's a U.S. Coast Guard regulation. Then the customer receives that checklist, and most of the time, the customer will call up and say, ‘Which ones do I need to get done?’”

The fact that so many Safe Harbor Members and guests ask him that same question, Jiovani adds, is proof positive that boaters recognize the technicians are there to make their experience as good as it can be. Everyone understands how precious each day of the boating season is. The goal is always for the service experience to add more days of fun. ▀

HEART OF THE HARBOR

Heart

OF THE HARBOR

At Safe Harbor Old Port Cove, the team's commitment to exceptional service and hospitality creates a community where Members feel at home.

For boaters who spend a lot of time on the water, marinas aren't just stops along the way—they're extensions of home. Time spent at the dock can shape your journey as much as time spent cruising. What differentiates a simple stopover from a place that feels like a home? It comes down to exceptional service, a strong sense of community, and the warm welcome you receive when you arrive.

Suzy Chadderdon, Business Manager at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove in North Palm Beach, Florida, understands this deeply. When she started working at the marina 41 years ago, she was only four years out of college. Decades later, the friendships she's formed from behind the front desk keep her anchored. "Over the years, I've built so many relationships with the marina's owners, captains, and customers that I couldn't see myself working anywhere but here," she says. "This is my home."

Located on a 60-acre peninsula, Safe Harbor Old Port Cove offers over 200 slips for boats ranging from 30 to 200 feet. Providing easy access to the Intracoastal Waterway, the location is a natural stop for Members passing through South Florida. What sets it apart isn't just the convenience or the amenities. It's the culture of hospitality the team has carefully nurtured over the years, one that's strengthened since the marina joined the Safe Harbor network in 2018.

"Safe Harbor is very family-oriented, encouraging people to travel together and be part of a community," says Suzy.

Safe Harbor's commitment to excellence aligns with Suzy's own approach to customer service. That could mean rearranging slips during the busy season to accommodate a Member for an extra night, having a golf cart ready to transport luggage, or remembering a Member's dog by name, along with the pup's favorite treat.

Sometimes, service is as simple as a warm smile and a positive attitude. "Service is our number one strong suit," says Suzy. "No matter what anybody needs, we can do that."

“ Over the years, I've built so many relationships with the marina's owners, captains, and customers that I couldn't see myself working anywhere but here. This is my home.”

SAFE HARBOR OLD PORT COVE

While the marina has seen impressive upgrades, it's the dedicated team, strong community, and memorable moments that define life at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove.

Suzy isn't the only familiar face to greet Members when they arrive at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove. Office Manager Kim Sharp joined the team 31 years ago after a decade spent boating with her husband in Annapolis. Kim was ready to step back from life on the water but wanted to stay connected to the boating community, a balance she's found in her role at the marina. Over the years, she's built friendships with countless boaters and helped foster a culture of service that, for her, is second nature.

"Customer service is everything," says Kim, who learned this lesson from an early age at her family's automobile dealership. Whether she's helping a Member over the phone or handling a last-minute request at the front desk, she's dedicated to finding solutions. "In a bad situation, customer service can fix it."

Jim Nester

Over the past seven years, Kim has received countless compliments from Members about how the marina has positively changed since joining Safe Harbor. She's witnessed firsthand how Safe Harbor's investments have improved the Member and guest experience. But just as important as the physical improvements is the team. "We're like a big family," Kim says.

Jim Nester, General Manager at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove, also understands that the team behind the property makes all the difference. From the moment a boat approaches the dock, Safe Harbor Teammates set the tone for a Member's entire stay.

"When I hire a dockhand, I look for somebody who's friendly and has a kind heart," says Jim. "You can teach everything else, but those are the people we look for because they'll communicate what we're trying to do here."

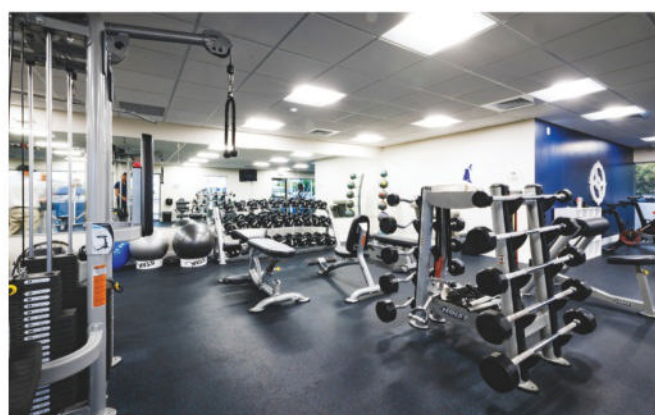

Waterfront views from Belle's at Safe Harbor Old Port Cove

Since joining Safe Harbor Old Port Cove four years ago—after previously managing Safe Harbor North Palm Beach and Safe Harbor New Port Cove, both in Florida—Jim has focused on fostering a sense of community among Members. One of his biggest accomplishments has been creating a new Members' lounge, where guests can connect over a game of pool or a morning coffee. He also helped expand the gym from 800 to nearly 2,000 square feet, giving Members more room to unwind and stay active.

Beyond the physical spaces, Jim believes that real community is built through shared experiences. Throughout the season, Safe Harbor Old Port Cove hosts various events designed to bring Members together, from Thursday yoga classes to monthly Friday socials, and much more.

Newly expanded gym

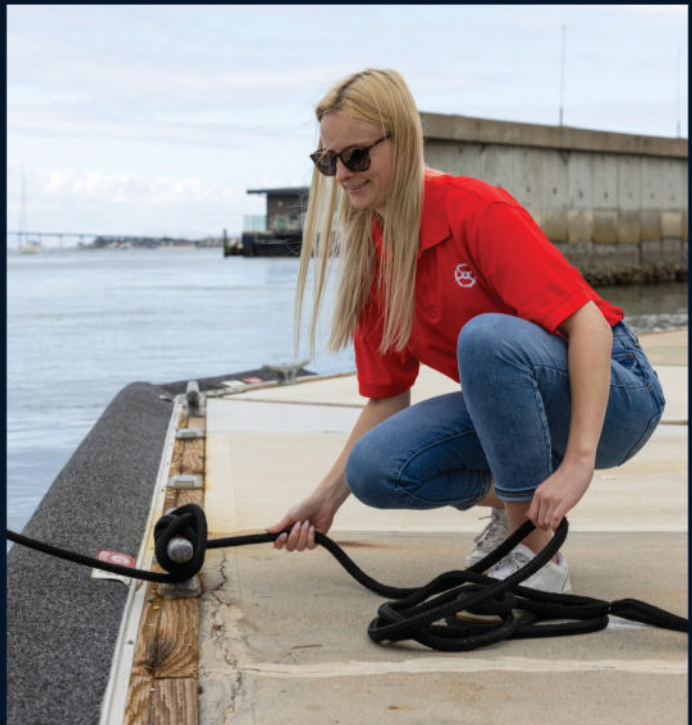

Suzy's goal is to continue expanding that community. After more than four decades at the marina, retirement isn't even on the radar. Her hope for the future is to get more slips so she can accommodate more Members.

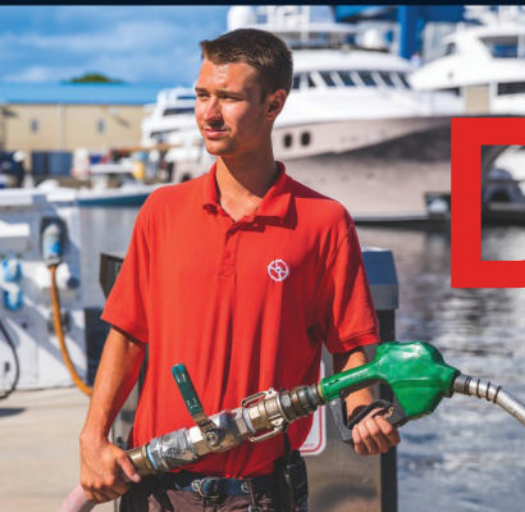

This isn't just a job for Suzy and her colleagues. It's a commitment to creating an experience that makes Members feel like they belong. "We hope that Members make great memories here," says Jim.

Through the team's dedication, Safe Harbor Old Port Cove has become more than just a stop along the way. It's a home for Members to return to, season after season. ■

ODE TO DOCKHANDS

ODE TO

DOCK HANDS

These hard-working pros elevate the Member experience.

Much can be said about Safe Harbor's size, scale, and the executives who set the vision and culture for the company. But let's not forget an incredible group of Teammates who make great impacts on the experience of Members and guests: the dockhands. In my experience, it's the small army of seasonal high school and college kids who catch lines and help pump fuel during the summer months who consistently make a Member's day.

When the wind is whipping and the current is ripping, the smiling young people who run down to meet you with knees bent and arms outstretched, ready to catch your lines and guide you home, make it possible for a skipper to breathe a sigh of relief. A dockhand offers that extra hand when you're tying up and helps you get sorted with shore power, and in doing so, has the power to make Members and guests feel welcomed. And rarely do interactions with dockhands end when you're tied up. Spend a little time talking to them and you'll soon have the inside track on great local restaurants and where you can score the best scoop of ice cream in town.

The youth of each new generation often get a bad rap, but in my years as a Safe Harbor Member, the young dockhands I've interacted with at a variety of properties—while getting fuel, ice, or a ride on the launch—stand in stark contrast to any negative stereotypes. Friendly, polite, and, most importantly, helpful, these young people are often exceptional ambassadors for the Safe Harbor brand. Maybe that's because so many of them have grown up boating and engaging with adults on the docks; or maybe the sun and fresh air bring out the best in them.

I can recall countless occasions where I started making small talk with a dockhand about where they go to school and what they're studying, and that morphed into a thoughtful back-and-forth conversation about everything from boats to business. There's something about the young employees at Safe Harbor that reassures me our future is bright in the hands of this generation.

Most dockhands make their mark in high-stress docking situations. We've all seen it happen or been there ourselves. Perhaps there's a mechanical failure, or the elements get your boat going sideways down a fairway, sending you careening toward that new center console with its shining fleet of outboards on the transom. While a mature married couple might yell during these moments of panic, I've watched as a cadre of young people in red polos approached a high-stakes situation with the swiftness of a SWAT team—fending off, catching lines, and restoring order.

I often tell my wife that working at a Safe Harbor location as a dockhand would be a great summer job. Alas, a magazine editor pushing 40 is probably not the ideal candidate for the job. While it's a little too late for me, I sometimes think about how it might be a great summer gig for my two boys someday. The ability to communicate clearly, defuse stressful situations with poise, and make others feel welcomed—I see those qualities all the time in Safe Harbor dockhands. Who wouldn't want those skills instilled in their own children, too? ■

REMEMBERING
IN REMEMBRANCE: JANE KIRKMAN

Safe Harbor Cape Harbour

When Hurricane Ian barreled into the Gulf Coast of Florida in September 2022, Jane Kirkman's house in Fort Myers flooded with 19 inches of water. That didn't stop her from making a beeline to Safe Harbor locations that had experienced Category 4 storm damage. When she showed up, no one was surprised.

"She cared so much, not just about her work, but for all of her Teammates," says Jacey Stornetta, Safe Harbor Regional Sales Director. "Jane was massively dedicated."

"She worked 24/7," says Aileen Gibbs, Assistant Controller at Safe Harbor Cape Harbour. "She loved it though. It's what she lived and breathed."

Kirkman, Regional Vice President of Safe Harbor Florida West, passed in November 2024 at age 66. Anytime someone leaves this earth, those left behind suffer the space of their absence. When their personality and presence are as big as Kirkman's, that absence feels vast as an ocean.

"She was such an integral part of our company," says Stornetta. "On team calls she would talk about her Teammates, and how well they were doing. She was always appreciative, always giving credit where credit was due and never talking about herself. I think that's how she touched so many different lives in our company, even people who never met her in person."

Gibbs, who worked closely with Kirkman for 18 years, says "She was a tough cookie, but loved everyone on her team. She expected a lot from people, everybody had to step up their game, which was a good thing."

She was a big part of this place, and as hard as she worked, she loved just as hard.”

AILEEN GIBBS | ASSISTANT CONTROLLER AT
SAFE HARBOR CAPE HARBOUR

"She made sure we beat deadlines. We never met deadlines, we beat them," notes Jaret Rogers, a mentee of Jane's who recently stepped into the Regional Vice President role.

Kirkman put so much energy into the care and love she felt for those around her. She cared about their work, but she also cared about their lives. "She treated us as if we were her family 100 percent every day," Rogers says.

"She cried with us and laughed with us, through every little milestone. We talked about work and life, and she was the easiest person to talk to," Stornetta says.

Jane and her beloved German shepherd

When they did talk family, the conversation would invariably veer to her two German shepherds, Levi and Lena, who she raised from pups and was absolutely devoted to. "They were like her babies," Gibbs says. "She loved her dogs."

Even now, Gibbs walks past Kirkman's old office at Safe Harbor Cape Harbour and feels her presence. "She was my go-to person for perspective on things. She was a big part of this place, and as hard as she worked, she loved just as hard."

"She loved us wholeheartedly, like family," Rogers says. "And that's why I loved Jane." ■

IN GOOD TASTE

IN GOOD Taste

Safe Harbor Members indulge in a culinary adventure by the water.

March in South Florida is a feast for the senses, and Safe Harbor Grand Tasting was no exception. Members gathered at Safe Harbor Lauderdale Marine Center to kick off a culinary adventure with an elegant welcome reception. As the sun dipped below the skyline, guests enjoyed fresh local flavors, sipped expertly crafted cocktails, and swayed to the rhythm of live music. Laughter and lively conversation filled the air, setting the tone for a weekend of connection.

The highlight? A VIP experience at Goya Foods' Grand Tasting Village, the crown jewel of the South Beach Wine & Food Festival. Amidst the ocean breeze, Members sampled exquisite bites from world-class chefs, discovered bold new wines and spirits, and mingled with culinary icons. The weekend came to a perfect close with a relaxed brunch and a serene excursion on Fort Lauderdale's waterways—one last toast to good food, great company, and unforgettable memories.

Turn the page to relive some of our Members' favorite moments.

“You guys put on such great events.”

I wanted to thank you so much for the wonderful experience we had at Safe Harbor Grand Tasting! You guys put on such great events. We absolutely love it. Love being a part of Safe Harbor. We have a goal this year of trying to go to all of the events if we can; think it would be really cool!

- JJ L.

“THANK YOU for a great weekend!”

We can't thank Safe Harbor enough for the Fort Lauderdale weekend events! IT WAS GREAT!

After enjoying the great weekend making new friends at the Experience, I can't wait to start enjoying our new home port Safe Harbor Pilots Point and the rest of the Safe Harbor lifestyle.

THANK YOU for a great weekend again!

MOUNT GAY®
Barbados Rum EST 1703

ANCHORED IN TRADITION

The 18th century ushered in a golden age of exploration, discovery, and pirateering. Sailors claimed to reach Barbados, but their tales were only believed if they returned with a barrel of rum: the proof of passage. Founded in 1703, Mount Gay became that proof—and today stands as the world's oldest rum distillery and the true spirit of sailing.

That spirit lives on at Safe Harbor Experiences where Members enjoy exclusive tastings and curated cocktail workshops that honor Mount Gay's deep connection to sailing, and life at sea. More than a drink—it's a tradition carried forward, one sip at a time.
